Partners Licence 2027

One licence per sector. Yours, or theirs.

Twelve months in front of the UK's verified property professionals, on the platform built for the industry. One firm per sector. When a sector is signed, it closes.

Chris and David Tremlett, founders of Gatha.

People only do business with their friends. Not their contacts, not their prospects. Their friends.

David and I started this company in January 2024 because property, one of Britain's biggest industries, had nowhere of its own online. The platform came first. Members met each other in the app and asked us for a reason to meet in person, so we built the events. Two industry awards later, we have rebuilt the whole thing from the ground up as Gatha, on our own infrastructure, owned outright.

The Partners Licence is how a business gets to be one of those friends at scale. Not with banner ads. By teaching. Your people on a named webinar series, your firm in every new member's first session, your posts in a feed that has no algorithm deciding who sees them.

There is one licence per sector. I would rather tell you that now than have you find out a competitor signed first.

Chris Tremlett

Co-founder, UK Homes Network Limited, trading as Gatha

01

Your buyers are online. Your posts are not reaching them.

On the platforms property people use every day, the industry sits somewhere between recruitment and lifestyle content. The surveyor with twenty years of judgment gets the same reach as a viral post about a kitchen. The developer looking for a specialist finds whoever paid the most.

Gatha fixes that for one industry. Verified property professionals only. No algorithm in between. Post to the feed and the feed sees it.

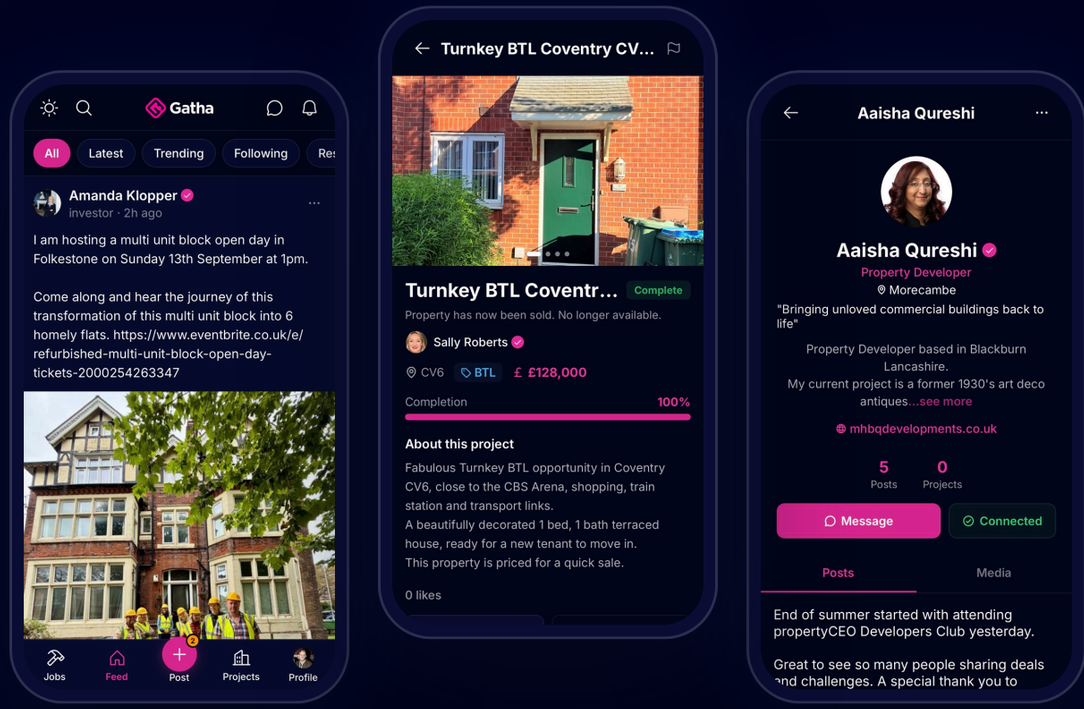

For a business that sells expertise to developers, landlords and investors, that changes the maths. You are not competing with influencers for attention. You are one of a small number of named partners in a room built for your buyers.

Everywhere else	On Gatha
Anyone can join. Your audience is diluted by every other industry.	Every member verified as a UK property professional.
An algorithm decides who sees your post.	No algorithm. The feed is the feed.
You pay to reach people who scroll past.	You teach people who signed up to learn.
Your competitors sit next to you in every sidebar.	One licensed partner per sector.

Who you reach. The people who commission the work.

Gatha is built around the people who buy professional services in property: the ones who need a surveyor next month, a QS on the next scheme, an accountant who understands SPVs, an architect who has dealt with their planning authority.

04

The firms that win here teach.

Property people do not buy expertise from an advert. They buy it from the person who explained their problem better than anyone else. The licence is built for service firms that can do that.

At the centre of every licence is your own named webinar series, one session a quarter, dated before the year starts. Your people, your subject, our audience. We host it, promote it, record it, edit it, publish it to YouTube and list it on demand in the app.

A series compounds where one-off sessions do not. Every quarter's attendees are the warmest list for the next. By the end of the year your firm is the one the industry checks in with, and the platform holds a library of your expertise that keeps working after the night.

05

What the licence includes. All of it, for twelve months.
